LIBERTY NOTESBy Kevin L. Jamison*

It is a Good Day for Liberty.

First Lady Eleanor Roosevelt had a concealed carry license. The license was issued by Dutchess County New York. It is marked "Not Valid in City of New York." Persons with a license to carry, even an internationally known figure, were not good enough to carry in New York City. In Missouri those of us with a license to carry are not good enough to carry in certain areas. There is a bill moving in the legislature to reduce the number of "gun free zones." The bill will allow persons with a license to carry on public transportation and most churches. The bus company claims the buses are safe, but put plexiglass shields around the driver. Bus riders are vulnerable going to and coming from bus stops. Under the bill churches will still be able to mark themselves with "no guns" signs. This will work well as soon as guns learn how to read, or when people who violate laws obey signs.

Rally Day will be 26 April, 2022 from 10 AM until High Noon. Be part of saving the future for your grandchildren. Various politicians will speak. You will have a chance to see, and speak to, your legislator. Persons with a License To Carry can carry concealed in the Capital Building; except for the legislative chambers and the area overlooking the chambers and committee hearing rooms.

There is a new Halloween movie. In the last offering the villain was set on fire in a burning house. The fire department rescues him and he shows his gratitude by massacring the entire department. Michael Meyers has been shot stabbed beaten and burned and he keeps coming back. Covid has not stopped him. Perhaps he could be enticed to run with scissors. The myriad dangers of modern life do not touch him. There are real-life monsters who can be hard to kill. The record is an armed robber in Chicago shot 33 times in the chest and head with 9mm and twice with a 12 gauge before he went down. This is why we have handguns of sufficient capacity.

An 18 year-old student produced a gun in Olathe East High School. He wounded two staff members before the school resource officer badly wounded him. Media reports stress that the student was firing a "ghost gun." This is often described as an illegal gun. It is not. It has never been illegal to make a gun for your own use. There are some legal hoops to jump through. To transfer such guns to another person can very well be illegal. The fact that they are untraceable is considered ominous. I doubt that the fact the gun is untraceable was of concern to the shooter. It was found in his possession. The important point is that the only thing that stopped a bad guy with a gun was a good guy with a gun. This is not the lesson the media has taken. One editorialist claimed that when she went to Olathe East High, about twenty years ago, gun laws were stronger. This is not true. Despite claims the same categories of persons prohibited from having guns twenty years ago are prohibited today. Laws for purchase and possession have not weakened; if anything they have strengthened. NRA supported measures have increased the number of states reporting persons to the National Instant Check System. Eighteen year-olds cannot buy handguns or handgun ammunition.

These so-called "ghost guns" can be made with a 3-D printer out of plastic. Such guns are single shot and may not explode in your hand. The second type is based on an 80% receiver. The buyer completes the machining on the receiver and assembles the gun. This requires certain tools and a certain level of skill. The horror of these guns, according to the usual suspects, is that they cannot be traced. Guns left at gun scenes are usually traced from the manufacturer to the point where they are stolen, lost or sold to some anonymous person. The result is the same as "ghost guns."

The usual suspects demand "common sense" restrictions. Their proposals never would have prevented the outrage which inspired them. This indicates that common sense is not common among them.

The January issue of Concealed Carry Magazine begins a series on what makes a person an attractive target for attack, or unattractive target. The author sent surveys to incarcerated felons. He later learned that the prisons declared them contraband and trashed them. One would think that prisons would be interested in the results. Prisons are secretive institutions and reluctant to allow information to leak out. The results he finally obtained are interesting. Criminals are attracted to the weak or inattentive. They break off the attack if the target has a gun; but not as often as one would expect. Over half said they would try to disarm someone who pulled a gun on them. This is a warning that producing a gun will not end the conflict.

The same magazine has an article concerning what happens to your gun if you are taken to the hospital. This is always a possible result. Hospital security may seize the gun. Police may seize the gun. Getting the gun back can be a tricky proposition. I have seen many cases in which the police simply refused to discuss returning the gun. I have obtained good results with a letter to the attorney for the law enforcement agency saying: "My client wants his gun back. I want to sue in federal court under 42 U.S.C. section 1983 for deprivation of property without due process of law. Which one of us gets his wish?" I have had some success with these letters. Of course, I have often had to go to court. In federal court we can get damages, punitive damages and attorney fee. It is time consuming. Good things come to those who wait.

People often tell me that their gun is "registered" to them. This is not possible except with National Firearms Act weapons. True, when purchased at a dealer's shop a 4473 is filled out connecting the buyer to that gun. The police can trace a gun found at a crime scene from the manufacturer or importer to the distributor to the shop and to the buyer. What they cannot do is look at a gun's serial number and determine the owner. They cannot look at the gun owner and find out what guns he owns. The ATF is computerizing old 4473 forms with the intent to have a registration record.

A Second Amendment lobbyist's secrets to political success

We all know that politics is screwed up.

From a uniparty that stifle dissent at all levels of government to politicians always finding ways to sneak through anti-freedom legislation, one cannot help but get disenchanted with the political process.

I personally don't blame people who get burnt out by politics and hang up the gloves. However, it doesn't have to end that way.

More often than not, people tend to set unrealistic goals in their political activities. In addition, they generally chose fruitless political battles. One thing I've stressed for a while is the importance of getting involved in political battles that are already popular among the grassroots. Do not re-invent the wheel nor should you start from scratch. Ideally, join a political fight that already has a lot of momentum behind it.

One of those battles is Constitutional Carry. I recently sat down with an old co-worker of mine, Brenden Boudreau, to talk about this. Brenden is the Founder and Executive Director of Great Lake Gun Rights and the Director of Field Operations with the National Association for Gun Rights.

In a recent episode of El Niño Speaks, I talked about Michigan politics, the best strategies to use in politics, and the future of Constitutional Carry.

Growing ATF Database Prompts Fears of Gun Registry

Gun owners were understandably concerned to learn this week that the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives maintains a database that contains nearly one billion firearm transaction records. ATF's disclosure was the result of a records request by Rep. Michael Cloud (R-Texas 27th), which was prompted by an earlier report from the Washington Free Beacon that 54 million records were added to the agency's database in 2021. While the database exists as a function of long-standing ATF practice and federal law, the records represent a real threat to gun owners and should further motivate gun rights supporters to guard against further government involvement in firearm transactions.

Rhode Island Ban on Stun Guns Ruled Unconstitutional

On March 15, 2022, the United States District Court for the District of Rhode Island found the Rhode Island ban on the possession of stun guns was unconstitutional under the Second Amendment.

The decision is expected. Several other courts have found a complete ban on stun guns to be unconstitutional. The foundational decision was made in the United States Supreme Court in its unanimous decision about a stun gun ban in Massachusetts, Caetano v. Massachusetts.

In the Rhode Island opinion, written by District Judge William E. Smith, there are several interesting observations. Judge Smith observes it is the burden of the state to prove an item is not in common use, and the item is not used for lawful purposes such as self-defense.

Judge Smith finds, unsurprisingly, stun guns fall within the protection of the Second Amendment.

An Amish man has been arrested for illegally being in the firearms business. An FFL cannot sell guns without seeing a photo ID. The Amish have religious rules against photographs. The defendant sold to other Amish, and a few others. So, he is arrested.

A company claims to have produced a “smart gun.” It is supposed to only fire for the legal owner. At a demonstration it fired once, and failed. The media still claim that it is a successful technology. Perhaps they do not know how guns are supposed to work.

I ran across a gun shop called Muddy River Tactical. It has been in Platte City for a couple of years and has recently moved alongside 92 Hwy at 1st street. He has an impressive inventory and shelves of ammunition. He makes holsters. I wish him well. It will give me a place to relax after court in Platte County.

Twenty-three states now have constitutional carry.

The Red Cross reports a severe blood shortage. There is always a blood shortage in the winter and the pandemic and economic problems have made it worse. Give a little blood and wear your Second Amendment shirt or button when you do.

PRESIDENT’S CORNER

THE THREE STOOGES STRATEGY

K. L. Jamison

I was never a great fan of the Three Stooges. One of their films has stuck in my mind. The Three were dressed as Hitler, Mussolini and Tojo at a peace conference. Mo, as Hitler, declares “we want peace!” Curley/Mussolini chimes in “Yeah, a piece of this country, and piece of that country, a piece of another country. . .”

This strategy has been used to whittle away our rights. The usual suspects have whittled away all of our rights, to hunt, to own and use guns. We have used the same strategy to take them back. The usual suspects continue to whittle away our rights. Their current demand is to restrict semi-automatic firearms while simultaneously declaring that no one will take our guns. They believe we are too stupid to catch on.

Some of us have no interest in modern rifles. I remember a black powder shooter looking at an AK-47 and declaring that he would not have one in the house. My firearm interests are more eclectic but there are categories of firearms in which I have little or no interests. Still, I would not sacrifice them.

The usual suspects have demanded bans on a variety of gun types. From “Saturday Night Specials” to “assault weapons” to .50 rifles to “ghost guns” they have some after different categories as the opportunity presented itself. We cannot surrender any category of firearm. The Second Amendment established a NATO doctrine. This doctrine says that any attack on any category of firearm is an attack on all. In 1966 a psychopath climbed into a tower in Austin Texas with a cache of firearms. He killed eleven people and wounded 31 with a Remington 700 bolt-action rifle fitted with a telescopic sight. If that happened today there would be demands to restrict “sniper rifles.”

We are constantly told to “compromise” to give up a piece of our rights for the promise of peace. We have compromised on every firearms restriction in the twentieth century. We are presented with an unending list of more demands to compromise. The usual suspects cannot ask us to compromise until they answer three questions:

1. What gun rights will they never touch?
2. If someone else tries to take those rights will you help us defend them?
3. Why should we believe you?

I thank you for the honor of being your president.

"After a shooting spree, they always want to take the guns away from the people who didn't do it. I sure as hell wouldn't want to live in a society where the only people allowed guns are the police and the military."

Florida's Constitutional Carry Challenge

Passing Constitutional Carry in the Sunshine State Won't be So Easy

Within the current realignment of the conservative movement post-2020, there are many examples of inflection points within our state and local governments across the nation which will indicate whether pro-liberty, populist leaders will be able to achieve the groundwork necessary for potential changes in our federal government.

One such example is in Florida, where State Representative Anthony Sabatini introduced HB 103, a constitutional carry bill, into the house in 2021. Constitutional carry is the root of the Second Amendment, and other red states throughout the nation the last six years have headed the calls of conservative activists to pass similar legislation so the right to carry could be exercised by all law abiding citizens.

If passed, this bill would make Florida the 22nd state to make constitutional carry part of state law. With eyes on Florida, the passing of constitutional carry would not only solidify this individual right but would also ground a major electoral change by making Florida a major Republican stomping ground for years to come, finally shedding itself of its previous battleground state status.

Nothing is for certain, however, since despite holding marked advantages currently in the State House (78-41) and State Senate (24-15), passing this bill into law will be an uphill battle because of RINOs standing in the way.

It was only a short time ago that SB 7026 (also known as the "Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School Public Safety Act") was established, with support of sitting Republicans teaming up with gun grabbing Democrats. What this bill did was to codify a cluster of egregious laws to disincentivize gun ownership, including but not limited to new rules such as:

Making it illegal for persons under the age of 21 to own a firearm of any kind, leaving them utterly defenseless.

Imposing mandatory government waiting periods on the purchase of any firearm.

Banning of certain firearm accessories such as bump stocks.

An Orwellian "mental health" gun ban which could strip up to 3.5 million law-abiding Floridians of their rights without due process.

This authoritarian legislation was passed with solid Republican support, with the ultimate irony being that 67 of them were endorsed by the sellout organization the NRA, which claims to be for gun rights but does anything but that.

These 67 so-called Republicans with their NRA "A" ratings went lock step with the anti-gunners' snake oil and voted for this terrible anti-gun legislation.

Some Republicans are already planning to stop Sabatini's bill such as House Speaker Chris Sprowls, meaning the in-party fight will ultimately decide constitutional carry's fate this go-around.

As mentioned, nothing is guaranteed, which means all hands will be needed by right-wing activists on the ground to pressure their elected officials to pass Sabatini's bill through petitions, social media campaigns, livecalls, robocalls, literature drops, you name it and it needs to be done.

No one can remain complacent in this new age of power politics and think that just because a politician has a certain letter next to their name, that they can be relied on when these moments of truth come.

Conservatives and real populists will need to do the hard work to ensure a better outcome for themselves and their families.

"I wholeheartedly believe that the media is politicizing this tragedy. It seems that gun control laws is the major topic of conversation rather than focusing on the bigger issue of 17 innocent lives being taken at the hands of another human. ... I know many people who are pro-gun and others who support gun control but it seems that the media is specifically targeting those in support of gun control to make it seem as if they are the majority, and the liberal news outlets are the ones that seem to make the bigger effort to speak to these people."

—Brandon Minoff, a student of Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School

"Before a standing army can rule, the people must be disarmed; as they are in almost every kingdom of Europe. The supreme power in America cannot enforce unjust laws by the sword; because the whole body of the people are armed, and constitute a force superior to any band of regular troops that can be, on any pretense, raised in the United States."

Beyond Stand Your Ground: The Need for Immunity in Other Second Amendment Cases

Florida's Stand Your Ground statute and similar laws in other states can offer immunity from prosecution when someone uses deadly force to defend themselves and affords them quick access to an appellate review if the case doesn't go their way.

In other words, if a defendant involved in a defensive shooting invokes a Stand-Your-Ground defense, their case can be dismissed before a trial even begins if it is proven they are entitled to statutory immunity, or appellate judges can be brought in quickly to make sure the case gets handled correctly.

When a defendant files a Stand Your Ground motion, their case is put on hold. Prosecution is halted. The trial court must hold a "Stand Your Ground" hearing – a sort of mini-trial – to determine whether the defendant's use of force meets the standards for Stand Your Ground immunity. At this point, the burden shifts to the prosecutors, who must then prove by "clear and convincing evidence" why the defendant is not entitled to immunity from prosecution.

After this mini-trial, the judge can either dismiss the charges or allow the case to go forward. However, if the charges are not dismissed, the defendant can file a Writ of Prohibition, which quickly bumps the case up to an appellate court for review. This writ can save the time it normally takes to get to the appellate level – usually as much as 18-months to two years – because it allows the defendant to forego a jury trial, sentencing, and other delays and present their case directly to the appellate judges, who can affirm or deny their writ.

Stand Your Ground was created to protect people from unjust, malicious, or politically motivated prosecutions after they acted in self-defense. By shifting the burden of proof to the state and by making an appeal quick and easy, the law has become a powerful tool, which some believe should be expanded to include other statutes involving Second Amendment rights.

"We need a Second Amendment immunity defense for anything involving the lawful possession of a firearm," said former Florida prosecutor Lisa Chittaro. "It should mirror Stand Your Ground statutes, but it needs to be broader. It should allow defense attorneys to ask the court to find immunity under the protections of the Second Amendment quickly and efficiently and if they don't, it should provide a quick route to the appellate level without having to go through the entire court process, which can take years."

Chittaro pointed to several types of criminal cases that should be covered by Second Amendment immunity. Most involve arrests stemming from gun-free zones, such as schools, sporting events, and airports. Many of them lack knowledge – a major factor in a criminal case – much less actual intent to commit a crime.

"If a parent picks up their child from school and they forgot their firearm and someone sees it and complains, they should be covered by Second Amendment immunity," she said. "The same goes for other gun-free-zone prosecutions where there was no knowledge or intent."

The problem with most of the prosecutions resulting from arrests in prohibited places is that police and prosecutors often forget that Americans have a constitutional right to keep and bear arms. A trial judge and/or appellate court should review these cases to determine specifically if it involved this constitutionally protected right, or if the defendant knowingly and with intent committed a crime. Besides, in many states, the list of prohibited places grows every time their legislature meets. This is lawfare – pure and simple.

Every prosecution stemming from an arrest in a prohibited place should begin with an acknowledgment of the defendant's Second Amendment rights, especially since gun-free zones infringe upon these rights. If a case involves absentmindedness, and not knowledge or the specific intent to commit a crime, judges need to toss them out. It is, after all, what the Framers had in mind when they wrote the Second Amendment.

STAY OUT OF JAIL CARD NEW EDITION (2016 still latest information)

"There is no 'get out of jail free card,'" said Western Missouri Shooter's Alliance President Kevin L. Jamison. "So we wrote a 'Stay Out of Jail Card.'" The wallet-sized card contains a brief summary of Missouri weapons and self-defense law, the twenty locations weapons cannot be carried and an outline of how to report a self-defense incident.

The card is written by lawyers and has proved popular with gun owners, law enforcement and gun shops for its answers to common questions. Now in its tenth edition; the card has been updated to reflect recent changes in the law.

The card is available at www.WMSA.net. "The card is free," said Jamison. "We only ask that if it keeps you out of a dollar's worth of trouble, send us the dollar."

Armed Self-Defense: One Fateful Day In March

If you listen to the Los Angeles Times, the worst thing any homeowner can do is purchase a firearm for defense of themselves and their family.

On January 31, the Times published an op-ed by Dr. Steven J. Sainsbury, a hospice and geriatric physician from San Luis Obispo, Calif., titled “Thinking of buying a gun for self-defense? Don’t do it.” In the op-ed, Sainsbury attempts to make the case that there are hardly any successful armed self-defense episodes, and having a gun in your home is far more likely to lead to the homeowner being killed than using the gun for self-defense.

It’s a good thing three homeowners in Fontana, Calif., Longview, Texas, and Lincolnton, N.C., didn’t read (or believe) Sainsbury’s anti-gun tripe, as all three of them were forced to use firearms to defend their homes on the very same day earlier this month—March 5.

In the Fontana, Calif., incident, the very same Los Angeles Times that published Sainsbury’s anti-gun editorial reported that a homeowner called police at 10:47 p.m. to say that at least one person had made illegal entry into his home; he added that he believed the intruder was armed. Grabbing his own firearm, the homeowner exchanged gunshots with the intruder.

Thankfully, in this case, the homeowner shot straighter. When police arrived, they found a man wearing gloves and a mask dead in the hallway. Police reported that the dead intruder had a semi-automatic handgun lying next to his body. The investigation continues, but police believe the homeowner justifiably defended himself against an armed intruder.

Kxxv.com radio reported that, on the same night in Longview, Texas, a woman also used her firearm to defend herself from a home intruder. Sheriff Department officials said Mathew Dillon George forced his way into a Longview residence while the homeowner was present. According to reports, George was given a verbal warning to leave, but refused to heed that warning. Fearful for her safety, the woman shot George, who was found at the scene by authorities and taken to a hospital. Harrison County Sheriff Brandon “B.J.” Fletcher put that self-defense episode into perspective for the media.

“This entire incident is an excellent example of the importance of our Second Amendment,” Sheriff Fletcher said. “I am thankful the homeowner was unharmed, but also thankful the suspect in this episode will now face his consequences through the judicial system; it could have ended a lot worse.”

In North Carolina, a homeowner in Lincolnton was also forced to use a gun to defend his home on March 5.

According to a report at wbtv.com, Charles Mayberry went to a home where his wife was living in order to confront her and the homeowner. Authorities say that after Mayberry pushed his way into the house and got into an altercation with the homeowner, the homeowner ran to the back bedroom. When he was pursued, he fired one shot, grazing Mayberry’s forehead. He then ran next door and called authorities.

Mayberry was arrested after being released from the hospital. Since then, he has been charged with felony breaking and entering and other charges.

In the end, Dr. Sainsbury, who wrote the op-ed on the “ineffectiveness” of armed self-defense, likely wouldn’t want to hear about these three successful cases where use of firearms likely saved lives. Fortunately for the victims who defended themselves successfully, they hadn’t subscribed to his anti-gun theory about self-defense.

The Alliance is a regionally-based, grass-roots organization that seeks to;

- 1) Counter the designs of malicious legislators.
- 2) Confront the media's twisted portrayals of gun rights issues.
- 3) Politicize and activate gun owners in defense of their rights.
- 4) Acquaint the public with the true nature of the Second Amendment.
- 5) Network with other pro-gun groups to coordinate local, state and national strategies.
- 6) Train people in basic firearm safety and handgun defense.
- 7) Sponsor and support pro-gun legislation.
- 8) Make politicians aware that gun owners are awakening from their accustomed apathy and
WILL TOLERATE NO FURTHER EROSION OF THEIR FREEDOMS!
