Will Absorbing the ATF Into the FBI Rein in Each Agency's Abuses?

By appointing FBI Director Kash Patel as acting head of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms, and Explosives (ATF), President Donald Trump took a step towards reining in a federal agency justifiably viewed by many as a threat to self-defense rights. He also signaled that he may consolidate government bodies that overlap in their responsibilities. Fans of big government and opponents of privately owned firearms won't like the move, but the idea of combining the agencies is hardly unprecedented. After all, President Bill Clinton had the same idea three decades ago.

Patel Wears Two Hats

"ATF welcomes Acting Director Kash Patel to ATF, who was sworn in and had his first visit to ATF Headquarters in Washington, D.C. today," the ATF posted on X on February 24. "We are enthusiastic to work together for a safer America!" Patel takes over from Steven Dettelbach, who resigned just before Trump took office. Dettelbach presided over an ATF seen as even more hostile to gun owners than has historically been the case.

The announcement of Patel's new role at the ATF came after the anti-gun Brady Campaign had already denounced Patel's confirmation by the Senate as FBI director, calling him a "known gun rights extremist and conspiracy theorist." The group also wasn't happy when Attorney General Pam Bondi fired former ATF Chief Counsel Pamela Hicks for "targeting gun owners." It's fair to assume the Brady Campaign is equally displeased with Patel's new job leading the ATF along with the FBI.

ATF's History of Incompetence and Abuse

But it's impossible to credibly argue that the ATF doesn't need a shakeup. After all, this is a federal agency that ran guns to criminal gangs in Mexico as part of a bizarre and failed "investigation," manipulated mentally disabled people into participating in sting operations—and then arrested them, lost thousands of guns and gun parts, killed people over paperwork violations, and unilaterally reinterpreted laws to create new felonies out of thin air (which means more cause for sketchy investigations and stings). The federal police agency obsessively focused on firearms has long seemed determined to guarantee itself work by finding ever more things to police.

But what about putting the same person in charge of both the ATF and the FBI? How does that make sense? Well, there's a lot of overlap in the responsibilities of federal agencies. During the ATF's "Operation Fast and Furious" gunrunning escapade in Mexico, it coordinated—badly—with the FBI, the Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA), and Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE). During its 2012 investigation of that fiasco, the Justice Department Inspector General "conducted interviews with more than 130 persons currently or previously employed by the Department, ATF, the DEA, the FBI, and the Department of Homeland Security (DHS)" on its way to identifying "a series of misguided strategies, tactics, errors in judgment, and management failures that permeated ATF Headquarters and the Phoenix Field Division."

Clinton Proposed Consolidating Federal Law Enforcement

Merging agencies—if that's where this is headed—might improve internal communications by clarifying chains of command and eliminating interagency competition. It might also reduce the ATF's singleminded focus on demonstrating its importance by making sure there are people violating gun laws—even if violations have to be manufactured—so there is always somebody to arrest and parade on TV. A larger multipurpose agency—basically, a supercharged FBI—should be able to shift gears from one crime focus to another if there aren't enough violators. Maybe.

Merged agencies should also be more efficient, since they won't duplicate each other's infrastructure. At least, that was the idea when the Clinton administration's National Performance Review, later rebranded the National Partnership for Reinventing Government, proposed the idea.

"More than 140 agencies are responsible for enforcing 4,100 federal criminal laws," the 1993 review noted. "Unfortunately, too many cooks spoil the broth. Agencies squabble over turf, fail to cooperate, or delay matters while attempting to agree on common policies."

The performance review, headed by then-Vice President Al Gore, recommended merging the DEA into the FBI to "create savings in administrative and support functions such as laboratories, legal services, training facilities, and administration." It then suggested assigning the law enforcement functions of the ATF to the FBI and its regulatory and revenue functions to the IRS.

Opportunity and Danger in a Merger

Done right, you wouldn't need as many agents for the combined agency, and you would have lower overhead. But—and this is a big concern—done wrong, you'd end up with a supercharged federal enforcement agency with all the hostility to civil liberties its old components embodied when separate, but now with lots more clout.

When he took charge of the FBI, Patel became the leader of an agency that has long served as a sort of political police. Its abuses date back decades and never seem to go away, just to morph into new ways of targeting anybody who criticizes whoever is currently in power.

"The FBI entraps hapless people all the time, arrests them, charges them with domestic terrorism offenses or other serious felonies, claims victory in the 'war on domestic terrorism,' and then asks Congress for more money to entrap more people," John Kiriakou, a former CIA officer and whistleblower, wrote in 2021.

That means there's already a problem that needs to be addressed, or it could infect a combined agency rather than taking the sharp edges off the ATF.

Also troubling is that before his nomination to head the FBI, Patel made comments suggesting he wants to target his own political enemies. He's backed off those threats, telling the Senate Judiciary Committee he's committed to "a de-weaponized, de-politicized system of law enforcement completely devoted to rigorous obedience to the Constitution and a singular standard of justice." But it's worth watching what he does with his roles at the separate FBI and ATF before combining the two agencies into something more dangerous.

Or maybe the Trump administration won't take the next step of formally integrating the ATF and the FBI. Self defense advocates have long called for ATF leadership that isn't actively hostile to gun owners. If all Patel does is rein in the ATF so that Americans get a few years of relief from that agency's abuses, that's a victory itself. But eliminating a much-loathed federal agency would be even better.

A CHEAP LEGAL MEMO

BEYOND EXPUNGEMENT

K. L. Jamison

We have had an expungement law for many years. We have found that the federal government does not recognize our expungement law, or that of other states. People with expungements run to gun shops and find they are still a prohibited person to the federal background check. There is a federal law allowing the ATF to restore gun rights. It has not been funded since 1992. There is no money to buy a piece of paper on which to write the restoration; much less to conduct the investigation. There is hope. US Attorney General Bondi has proposed a new rule under which the Department of Justice restores rights. I have not seen the text of the rule yet, but it sounds promising.

Several people have reformed themselves or grown out of their evil ways. Temperance has reformed many men. Such efforts should be rewarded. More information will fill in another column.

Mexico is suing Smith & Wesson and many other American gun companies for the violence in Mexico. It was dismissed in the lower courts under the Protection of Lawful Commerce in Arms law and appealed. The case was argued before the US Supreme Court. Mexico did not do very well. Granted, Justice Sotomayor suggested that the defendant's guns were popular with criminals because the serial numbers could be "scraped off." We know that this is not possible. Even if a serial number is ground off chemicals can restore the serial number. This demonstrates that lawyers need to put on expert witnesses to educate judges, if they will listen.

On the same note the case of Duncan v Bonita was heard in the 9th Circuit on 20 March, 2025. The case concerned California's law against magazines over 10 rounds. The state claimed that they were mere accessories that were not necessary to the function of the gun. The 9th Circuit upheld the ban. Judge Lawrence James Christopher VanDyke was frustrated by the state's attorney's ignorance of how guns work and as part of his dissent linked a video in which he demonstrated how guns work in terms that anyone could understand. At one point he likened magazines to the bobbin on a sewing machine. Imagine that.

LIBERTY NOTES

By Kevin L. Jamison

It is a good day for Liberty.

There is a report that an asteroid the size of a football field is approaching earth. It is said to be of sufficient size to destroy a city. Before we start picking cities for it to target, it might miss. It might land in the ocean and start a tidal wave-and destroy coastal cities. But it is believed that it will miss. There are a lot of asteroids out there, they won't all miss. Keep some bottled water, food and ammunition. One of them might hit; or the democrats might win the next election.

A month ago, as of this writing, President Trump gave Attorney General Bondi an order to identify policies that violate our Second Amendment rights. It was an order of sweeping scope. She was given a month to accomplish this vast task. It has been over a month and nothing has been published. Several of us were suspicious of her intentions when she took the job. It is a vast job and I give her a little slack in its accomplishment. I hope by the time this is published there will be good news. By the time you read this it will be two months.

A deputy at the Independence courthouse commented on my cane (made from a shovel handle). He said that it had to be intended as a weapon. I told him I am too old to hit people with sticks. I made my cane so that I had one I couldn't break. I heard that shovels are hard to fall off even when asleep. So far, so good.

Some of our members have given blood for our country or at least put themselves in a place (and country) where it was likely. I did not but I have donated blood. The last time the attending lady (there is a title for the job I can't spell) noticed me reading the NRA magazine and asked if I was a "gunnie." I bragged that I was. This may have brought us a tiny bit closer to public acceptance. Little things like this can be done by anyone.

A politician said that owning guns is a God-given right. A woman wrote to the local tabloid to complain that she had read the entire Bible and guns were not mentioned. Of course they were not. They were not invented for many centuries afterwards. The founders believed that certain natural rights were God given. Among these God-given natural rights is the right to own guns. If this woman had read the Bible, she must have read of the Jews fighting their way out of Egypt, through Sinai and seizing Palestine. The story of the battle of Jericho is famous. She would have read of raiders kidnaping members of Joshua's family and how he armed up, rode out and took them back. She must have read of the passage where Jesus told his disciples that if they had no sword to sell their cloak and buy one. He was immediately presented with two swords. Of course, some people only see, read, and hear what they want to see, read, and hear.

Professor John Lott has been tracking entertainment programs which mis-represent private gun ownership. Shows claim that self-defense with guns is rare and when it is attempted it is bungled badly. The gun owner is disarmed, over-reacts or shoots an innocent party. These things rarely happen to civilians; they happen less often than with law enforcement officers. This is propaganda. We can't stop propaganda, but we can correct it in our circle of friends.

A plan crashed in Toronto and the usual suspects blamed President Trump. Toronto is, of course, in Canada and has its own Air Traffic Control organization. This demonstrates how deranged the opposition is.

American Public Square is having a "discussion" about school killings. It focuses on Columbine. No one from our side has been invited. This is not a discussion. There is a rude term for it but it amounts to a group of the usual suspects getting together and agreeing with each other. There is not much we can do about that. From time to time, we have a single person invited to challenge their superstitions. It is a delicate thing to challenge their prejudices. One cannot convert a racist by telling him he is wrong. Direct confrontation causes them to circle the wagons. A small complication in their prejudices is called for. They are horrified that there are an estimated 422 million guns in civilian hands in a population of 330 million. If guns caused violence, we would all be dead; some of us twice over. That might help.

I have looked up some definitions. The Spanish word "gringo" is derived from the word for foreigner. The word "cis-gendered" means you are the gender listed on your birth certificate. It seems necessary to make up words to confuse people. I believe that words should help us communicate.

We need a cartoonist. Someone who can make fun of the world and the people in it. Some of these people are walking cartoons as it is.

I've started on my estate plan; and it is high time. Without a plan the division of my property might cause dis-sension. I don't want my sons to fight. Ownership of my guns could be a legal problem without a plan. I recently wrote an article on the wisdom of an estate plan. When I finished, I realized that I had not taken my own advice. I don't do estate planning, but I know a lawyer who does.

I Second That.

PRESIDENT'S CORNER

RALLY DAY 2025

K. L. Jamison

Rally Day approaches. We have been in the Capital Building every year since 1991. Our constant appearance won us License To Carry. We have continued appearing to keep License To Carry. All of the improvements to self-defense and gun law can be traced to our continued Rally's. One legislator was heard saying that he voted for License To Carry because we kept coming back. He thought we would stop if he did.

At the Rally legislators speak and we get to evaluate their sincerity. Legislators evaluate our commitment. The Rally is in the Rotunda. Looking up at the upper floors we see legislators and their minions counting our participants. The result influences their votes.

Visiting legislative offices afterward reinforces our impact. Very often the legislator is not in his office but in meetings. There will be a legislative assistant who will log the visit. Be nice to this person, she is the gateway to the legislator's vote.

I thank-you for the honor of being your president.

Senate Bill Would Protect Gun Owners Traveling Across State Lines

Sen. Doug Mastriano (R-33) has introduced the Protecting the Rights of Concealed Carry Permit Holders Traveling Across State Lines Act.

Senate Bill 244 would prevent Pennsylvania concealed carry permit holders from being unfairly targeted when traveling to states that do not honor our reciprocity agreements. By ensuring that Pennsylvania's Firearms License Validation System is not misused by out-of-state authorities, Mastriano's bill would protect the rights of citizens and uphold the Second Amendment.

"The Second Amendment was never meant to be confined by arbitrary state lines. Our constitutional rights do not end when we cross into another state, and neither should our ability to protect ourselves and our families," Mastriano said.

Despite having undergone rigorous background checks and meeting all licensing requirements, law-abiding gun owners have been wrongfully detained and subjected to legal harassment for exercising their rights. There have been documented cases of individuals being pulled over for routine traffic stops, only to be detained for hours after out-of-state law enforcement accessed Pennsylvania's Firearms License Validation System and found their concealed carry permit.

The legislation would amend Title 18 of Pennsylvania law to prohibit the sharing of Firearms License Validation System data with states that do not honor Pennsylvania's reciprocity agreements.

Virginia, Florida and Texas have passed similar measures to protect their citizens from unjust treatment in anti-gun states. These laws prevent non-reciprocal states from accessing concealed carry permit data, ensuring that lawful gun owners are not subjected to unfair detentions.

Additionally, 23 states have Constitutional Carry laws, meaning that law-abiding citizens do not even need a permit to carry a concealed weapon.

"Pennsylvania's failure to protect its gun owners puts them at risk even while states with stronger pro-gun laws recognize their rights," Mastriano said. "Pennsylvania must take action to ensure that our citizens are protected from overreaching state governments that seek to undermine the Second Amendment."

The bill is before the Senate Judiciary Committee for consideration.

"The judiciary of the United States is the subtle corps of sappers and miners constantly working under ground to undermine the foundations of our confederated fabric. They are construing our constitution from a co-ordination of a general and special government to a general and supreme one alone."
